

PREFACE.

WHOEVER has travelled beyond the white cliffs of Britain, must have lamented, almost at every stage, the want of information on local matters, which, although well known to every individual he meets, are to him as a sealed book.

Recourse must then be had to valets de place, or commissionaires, or to the kindness and patience of a friend, to